Sunday-school. A school in which instruction is given on Sunday; esp. such a school for children held in connexion with a parish or a congregation; such schools are now intended only for religious instruction, but originally instruction in secular subjects was also given.

Super- (sh'pər-, -ər), prefix, repr. L. super- = the adv. and prep. super above, on the top (of), beyond, besides, in addition, used in composition with the various meanings detailed below. (Cf. the related Sk. upari-, Gr. ὑπερ HYPER, OE. ofer, etc. OVER.)

A certain number of important Latin compounds, chiefly verbs, belong to the classical period, but the great majority are of later date, and many are recorded first from Christian writers. As a living prefix in English, super- first appears about the middle of the 15th c.; it became frequent in Elizabethan times, and in the 17th c. it was very widely used. In more recent times it has been extensively introduced into the nomenclature of chemistry and other sciences as a correlative to SUB-. In technical language it sometimes varies with SUPRA- (of which the strict correlative is INFRA-), e.g. super-local and supra-local, superorbital and supra-orbital, superlapsarian and supralapsarian.

The more important and permanent compounds are entered in this Dictionary as main words; the present article includes such compounds of a general character as have not a permanent status, and scientific terms of which the meaning may (for the most part) be gathered from the meaning of the prefix and that of the radical element.

A considerable number of Latin compounds were adopted in 'learned' form in OF., as superbender, supereminens, supererogation, superflus, superintendence, superintention, superior, a few of such compounds became permanently established, as superfluous, superlatif, superstition, but the majority have been superseded by forms with the 'popular' representative of L. super-, viz. sur-; e.g. surabonder, suréminent, surérogation, surintendence; cf. the parallel forms superflus, surflus in mod.F.

Pronunciation. The general rule is that the first syllable of the prefix carries the secondary stress of the compound, e.g. super-add, supererogation, super-numerary, superphosphate, supersequialteral, super-substantial. But this syllable carries the main stress where there is a contrast, implicit or explicit, with the radical element as a simple word or with some other compound of it, e.g. super-class, superflux, superhive, superman, super-nature, supersall, supersolid, superstructure; the Supra- (sɪˈprə), prefix, repr. L. suprā = *suprā (related to super and ultimately to snōb) adv. and prep., above, beyond, in addition (to), before in time, occurring in a few compounds in classical and late Latin; in med. and mod.L. it is mainly restricted to technical terms. Its meanings in English are for the most part parallel to, but in much less vogue than, those of SUPER-; but it is more prevalent than the latter in certain uses, e.g. the scientific uses in 1 a and 1 b, in which it is most commonly employed as a living prefix.

The stressing is as in compounds of SUPER-, q.v. p. 166/3.

1. Over, above, higher than; (less commonly) on, upon: in a physical sense.

1. In prepositional relation to the sb. implied in, or constituting, the second element: = SUPER- 1; as in late L. supræcelestis SUPRACELESTIAL, mod. L. suprā-axillāris (axilla AXIL), suprāfoliāceus (folium leaf).

a. Miscellaneous adjs., chiefly scientific: = SUPER- 1 a, c. Supra-aerial, situated above the air or atmosphere. Supra-axillary, Bot., arising above an axil, as a branch or bud. Supracoralline, Geol., lying immediately above the Coralline Oolite. Supracretaceous, Geol., lying above the Cretaceous series, as the Tertiary and more recent formations. Suprafoliaceous, Suprafoliar, Bot., situated or arising above (or upon) a leaf. Supraglacial, occurring upon the surface of ice, esp. of a glacier. Supraideal, written above the line. Supramarine, situated or occurring above the sea. Supradial, lying above the middle (e.g. of a series of rocks). Supratropical, next 'above', i.e. higher in latitude than, the tropical (see quot.).

D. Anat. and Zool. Extensively used to form adjectives (some of which are also used ellipt. as sbs.) in the sense 'Situated above, or on the dorsal side of (sometimes, upon the upper surface of) the part or organ denoted by the second element'; as in mod.L. supracostalis (costa rib), suprarenalis SUPRARENAL. = SUPER-1 b.

Numerous compounds of this class appear in recent Dicts., general and technical; the following is a selection of the more important. The meaning can usually be inferred from that of the second element; where necessary, a brief explanation or reference is added in parentheses. (Cf. SUB-1b.)
